Farmers Unite Against Crime And Thieves

Continued chicken stealing and other depredations on farms in southern Cook county has aroused the farmers to the point of organizing for their mutual protection.

The Bloom Protective Association was recently organized in Chicago Heights and has been so successful that they are extending their territory.

The purpose of this organization is to protect the property of its members against theft, arson, trespass, and other crimes, by warning signs, by posting awards for the capture and conviction of thieves and trespassers; by co-operating individually and as a body with regularly constituted law enforcing agencies; by insisting that members equip their farm buildings with the proper locks and warning devices; by requiring members to mark their poultry.

Any person of honesty and integrity residing within the jurisdiction of this association may become a member by signing the constitution and by-laws and paying the annual membership fees in advance.

The officers of the association are: President Roy Craddock; Secretary, Lyle S. Holcomb, Treasurer, Wm. Niedfeldt; Trustee, T. Paarlberg; Legal Counsel, Robert Burdett, and Deputy Sheriff, C. R. Kickert.

All members are required to observe and report suspicious characters, automobiles and unusual circumstances and to report immediately all cases of trespass against his property and to equip his farm buildings with proper locks and burglar alarms; to mark his poultry with suitable identification marks; to co-operate with other members in every way possible in the detention and capture of suspects and to assist in the prosecution and conviction of the guilty.

FIGHT WINDS UP IN $25,000 DAMAGE SUIT

As a result of an altercation between a landlord and his tenant, October 15th, a $25,000 damage suit was filed Tuesday of this week in the Will County Circuit Court by Terry Lewis, farmer who formerly lived near 187th street and Keane avenue, near Tinley Park, against Peter Nieman, owner of the farm and his son, Lester.

He has lectured before a total of 70,000 people this year, and is in great demand. His unusual personality and different treatment of his subject are perhaps responsible for his popularity.

Among the interesting features of some of his lectures are beavers building their dams at night, reeds in natural color of lakes and forests—the only ones of their kind in existence, and the taming and training of chipmunks and birds.

Lower Freight Rates Cut Feed Cost In County

Will county farmers will find it less expensive to carry their livestock through the coming winter months, as a result of new emergency freight rates on feed and livestock now in effect in this area, according to Farm Adviser L. W. Braham.

Cooperating with the AAA, railroads have agreed that hay may be shipped into this county at two-thirds of the normal hay rate, while forage may come in at half the normal rate for hay. Furthermore, if farmers desire, they may ship their livestock to some other county for pasturing at 85 percent of the normal commercial freight rate. The animals may then be shipped back into this county within one year at 15 percent of the normal livestock rate.

The new emergency rates have been designed to help farmers retain ownership of their better dairy and breeding stock, in spite of the shortage of feed in this territory resulting from the summer's drought. It is also hoped that this feeding assistance will prevent drastic declines in livestock prices caused by forced liquidation of herds in areas of feed scarcity.

According to information received from the extension service of the College of Agriculture, nine Illinois counties so far have been benefitted by this emergency freight tariff. Besides Will county, they are Boone, DuPage, Grundy, Kane, Kendall, Lake, McHenry, and part of Cook.

Twenty-one counties in Wisconsin have also been granted the new emergency feed and livestock rates, it is said.

FRANKFORT CITIZENS BANK DIVIDENDS PAID

Checks for a total of $35,000 in dividends were mailed yesterday by T. W. Plant, receiver, to depositors of the Citizens Bank of Frankfort, Ill., closed since the general bank moratorium of March 3, 1933.

The dividend represents 40 percent of deposits. It is the first dividend paid since the bank closed. Although the institution failed to reopen after the moratorium, it was not closed officially by the state auditor until July, 1933.

Plant said payment of the dividend was made possible thru negotiation of a Reconstruction Finance Corporation loan.

Payment of the money will further the boost in business expected when 40 percent of funds deposited in the Will County National and Joliet National banks were released Thursday.

Plant called attention to the fact that altho his office is in that part of the Will County National bank building formerly occupied by that bank, he is not the receiver for either of the national banking institutions. Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

Washington.—The smoke of battle has cleared away sufficiently since the election to permit of an analysis and already there is a general conclusion discernible as to two things:

Election Analysis

(1) The Republican party must undergo a complete reorganization, a complete elimination of the old line leaders and the assumption of power by virulent forward looking men and women of the newer generations.

(2) President Roosevelt, accorded the greatest vote of confidence ever given a Chief Executive, is confronted with the greatest responsibility ever laid on the lap of one individual in the history of this nation.

Thus, there can be no doubt, according to astute judges, that Mr. Roosevelt and his administration are in real danger because he has too many blind followers. It seems to be generally agreed among political leaders and observers—that is, all political leaders excepting those who refuse to believe a change has come—that the Republican party went into the recent campaign and finished that campaign without any kind of a program. Some critics are saying that Henry P. Fletcher, the Republican national chairman, is to blame. I do not find that criticism supported generally. But in politics some one always must be the goat and apparently Mr. Fletcher is to be made the goat by those Republicans who have been unable or unwilling "to take it."

Mr. Fletcher and his co-workers, Senator Hastings of Delaware, and Representative Bolton of Ohio, are known to have pulled back in their criticisms of the administration. The consensus seems to be, however, that this alone was not sufficient to have resulted in the overwhelming defeat which the party suffered. It was, rather, an entire lack of definite proposals from the Republican leadership, and throughout the country, according to well authenticated information, the younger crowd of Republicans was apathetic. They had nothing to encourage them and nothing to offer in argument in the place of the things the New Deal was preaching.

In some quarters it is emphatically insisted that the New Dealers, theories and all, amounted to a light in the dismal darkness of the economic depression. This school of thought argues that it does not matter whether success has crowned the President's recovery efforts. He at least has maintained a forward-appearing movement and in the absence of anything constructive from the other side, a people down-trodden and with resources exhausted look to him with a hope which they could not pin to any other flag staff.

But, as said above, Mr. Roosevelt has his problems. They are more dangerous than when he took office. With more than a two-thirds majority in each house of congress, the President, it is held generally, must guard himself against too many friends.

The two-thirds majority always has been regarded as a fine asset for an administration in forcing through legislation where it is necessary to apply a gag rule. This is particularly true in the house of representatives which has a tendency to become a maelstrom on too many occasions. Many new members, imbued with the idea of a New Deal mandate, will swallow the President's legislative proposals without question. History shows this to be a most dangerous condition for the Chief Executive. He has no opposition to call attention to mistakes, weaknesses, or vulnerable spots in the programs which he offers.

One official, and a rather high official at that, suggested the other day that he was in favor of "organizing" an opposition bloc in the house and senate. It was his conviction that if there were critics among the Democrats, they would constitute something of a leadership for the Republican minority and that, by these two groups, valuable criticism of administration policies would be available. All through the last session of congress numerous conservative Democrats, mainly from the South, were working under cover to hold the brain trust programs within bounds. Many of the senators, and representatives as well, went about their work quietly but none the less effectively and, I think it is conceded by most persons in a position to know, that these men kept the New Deal from going too far to the left.

One other phase of the Roosevelt problem deserves consideration. The campaign showed any number of men seeking election on the Democratic ticket to have ideas far beyond the New Deal program. In fact, some of them are ultra-radical. Observers here contend that Mr. Roosevelt is faced with a genuine threat from these personages. In other words, it appears to be within the realm of possibility that he will have to insure victory for the policies in which he believes. Legislation always is by compromise. If the President does not desire to go so far to the radical side he may be forced to support certain more conservative propositions in order that when the radical group makes demands, he can make concessions to them and accomplish the ends sought.

This conjecture, of course, is predicated upon the frequently heard condition that the radical bloc will be larger in congress than heretofore and that they will assert themselves. The President's ability to meet this condition obviously will be tested, but there are many observers who say that the President is the best tight-rope walker the country ever has seen.

Looking into the future, it seems perfectly safe to say that the realignment of parties has taken greater strides than most observers thought possible when Mr. Roosevelt was proposing the New Deal in the 1932 campaign. It was perfectly patent then and became more apparent as he took office, as I reported to you at that time, that Mr. Roosevelt was building a party of his own.

I heard a Washington political writer, a man of forty years' experience, say the other day that it was not impossible for a break-up of the "solid South" to occur within the next six years. He envisioned withdrawal of the conservative South from any party that tied closely into the liberal or radical groups that dominate the Middle West and the Rocky Mountain areas. It presented a picture rather new in the political scene in that it seemed to suggest the possibility of an alignment of the East against the Middle West and the far western sections of the country.

The thought was expressed with two factors in mind. It was pointed out that the bulk of the territory east of the Mississippi river is based in manufacturing industries. In that territory are many large and medium sized cities. Their interests are different than those west of the Mississippi. The condition resolves the question into one of economics.

The second factor to be considered is the fact that the so-called solid South is inherently conservative. That links with the great manufacturing sections of the country. If Mr. Roosevelt has succeeded or does succeed in creating his own party, under whatever name it may eventually be known, this Washington observer told me he foresaw gradual defection of southern Democrats and their alignment with manufacturing interests in a conservative party.

History shows that such developments as are pictured in the above prediction are very slow. Notwithstanding the rapid changes that have come since Mr. Roosevelt became President it is unreasonable to suppose that accomplishment of an entire political party revolution can be accomplished in time to affect the result of the 1936 Presidential election. Some students of politics maintain, however, that the development will have been sufficient by 1936 to wield some influence.

From all of the discussion I hear at this time the result in 1936 will be dependent upon whether there has been complete recovery and whether federal money holds out that long. There are few with whom I have talked who disagree with the premise that withdrawal of federal aid, for relief or otherwise, can be accomplished without important political reactions.

This is the story of a man whose name many of you have seen engraved in stone on many post offices throughout the United States. It is the story of a man who grew up in government service and who is now retiring to the rest and recreation which 49 years of government service certainly entitles him.

At the end of this month, James A. Wetmore will close his desk at the treasury where he has served since 1915 as acting supervising architect and from which office he has directed the greatest public building program ever undertaken by any government. Mr. Wetmore is seventy-one years old and he says that he is going to enjoy the rest of his life at play but he always hastens to explain that he has enjoyed nearly every day of the work he has been doing.

It was almost half a century ago that M. Wetmore accepted a job as a stenographer in the treasury. From the day in 1885 when he began work there, his rise has been steady and his ability constantly recognized. Thus it came about that when Oscar Wendt resigned in 1915 Mr. Wetmore was asked "to fill in for awhile." That "awhile" stretched over a period of 19 years during which Mr. Wetmore persisted in his refusal of the office of supervising architect. You will note wherever his name appears graven on the corner stone of a post office that there is the word "acting" before the rest of the title. The reason is simple. Mr. Wetmore is not an architect and never has been.

Thus a career officially ends, a career about which few of his countrymen knew. While his name appears on hundreds of corner stones, he participated in the ceremonies of the laying of only one. That was at Bath, N. Y., his birthplace. And that is the one corner stone of which he is proud.

Lesson for November 25

THE CHRISTIAN STEWARD

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 25:14-30.
GOLDEN TEXT—His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.—Matthew 25:21.
PRIMARY TOPIC—The Right Use of God's Gifts.

JUNIOR TOPIC—How to Use What We Have.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What We Owe to God.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Stewardship of Service.

Stewardship here includes one's self and substance—stewardship in money is only a small part of our responsibility. God has entrusted each of his servants with certain gifts, and will hold each responsible for the use he makes of them. God has lent us capital, and one day will require of us a report of the business we have done with it. By talents is meant whatever gifts and powers we possess as gifts from God, whether of nature or of grace, such as strength, reason, knowledge, influence, time, money, ability to speak, sing.

I. The Distribution of the Talents (vv. 14, 15).

1. It was a sovereign act. He called his own servants and distributed to them his own money. As the one who created us and owns us, he has assigned us our places and given us our several powers, intending that we put them to the best possible use.

2. It was an intelligent act. The distribution was made according to "several ability." The God who made us knew our ability to use gifts, therefore he made the distribution upon that basis. A recognition of God's sovereignty and intelligence regarding the distribution of his gifts will make us content in our sphere of labor.

3. It was a purposeful act. The talents were given to be traded with. They were not given to be used for personal gain and profit, but as stock in trade for the enrichment and glory of the Master.

II. The Employment of the Talents (vv. 16-18).

1. All the servants recognized that the talents were not their own—that they were responsible to the Lord for the use made of them. We are not responsible for the creation of gifts, but for the employment of such gifts as have been given unto us.

2. Two servants used their talents. The five-talent man put his to use and gained five more; the two-talent man put his to use and gained two more. This shows that God's gifts can be increased. The exercise of any gift increases it. It is not primarily a question as to what we have received, but as to what use we have made of what we have received.

3. The one hid his talent. The crime of the one-talent man was not that he had but one talent, but that he hid the talent which the Lord gave him. He did nothing with it. To hide a talent may be just as hard or harder than to use it.

III. The Accounting for the Talents (vv. 19-30).

1. Its certainty (v. 19). There is a day coming when we all must give an account of our stewardship. There is absolutely no escape.

2. The time (v. 19). The time of accounting will be at the second coming of Christ. The incentive to faithfulness is the coming of the Lord.

3. The judgments announced (vv. 20-30).

a. Reward of the faithful (vv. 20-23). (1). Praise, "Well done." All like to be praised. From childhood on through life, commendation is pleasing.

(2). Promotion, "Be thou ruler over many things." Much of that to which we look forward in life is the passing from lower to higher privileges and positions.

(3). Entrance upon the joy of the Lord. The five-talent man and the two-talent man received the same praise and the same promotion.

b. Punishment of the faithless (vv. 24-30).

(1). Reproach, "Thou wicked and slothful servant." To be called lazy is a reproach which even the lazy man dislikes.

(2). Stripped, "Take therefore the talent from him." The talent entrusted to him was to be taken from him.

(3). Cast out, "Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness."

HOW TO SHOOT

By Bob Nichols

Shooting Editor, Field and Stream

EVERY year in the United States when the hunting season rolls around, more than 7,000,000 healthy boys and robust men take to the field, gun in hand. Reports of hunting accidents begin drifting in to the newspapers. Some come back blinded by a careless load of shot from a friend's gun. Others come back with hands and arms and legs blown off. Some never get back alive.

The pity of the whole bloody business is that there was almost never a hunting accident yet that wasn't caused by somebody's needless, foolish carelessness. The only plausible excuse for the accident might be where a hunter faints in the field and falls on the muzzle of his gun. All other accidents are inexcusable.

So far as I can remember, I have never yet met a really good shot who was careless with his gun, loaded or unloaded. Every good shot knows that once or twice during his life his gun may go off unexpectedly. He's always ready for it when it happens. He accidentally let off load plows harmlessly into the ground, or up into the air, where it can hurt no one.

Merely from the practical standpoint, it is smart to be careful with your gun. You will be invited on enjoyable and successful hunting parties much more often, where the careless man with a gun never gets a second invitation. Careless gun handling is simply bad shooting manners. You make everybody near you nervous and uneasy. You get yourself disliked. Real sportsmen have nothing but anger and contempt for you. Be careful and gentlemanly in your gun handling and you will have much more pleasure hunting, have more good friends—and, important point, you may live longer.

Never keep a shotgun loaded about the house. Never leave shells where childish hands can slip them into the gun. Never point an "empty" gun at anything you do not wish to KILL.

When loading your gun in the field, never slip the shells in until you have looked through the barrel to see that there is not a bit of cleaning rag or other obstruction. Obstruction in the barrel will burst your gun on firing.

If you should fall in the field, again open your gun and look through the barrel. You may have filled the muzzle with mud, or snow, either of which will burst the gun on firing.

Never cross a fence with your gun cocked, or with the safety off. Put your gun through the fence muzzle first and lay it on the ground. Never stand it up against the fence. You may jar it down as you clamber over. Hundreds of careless gunners have crossed fences—and the Great Divide—at the same time.

When you meet friends or strangers in the field and stop to chat and pass the time of day, break your gun if it is a double barrel—let the other man see that it is safe. Other types of guns, shove the safety on, and let the friend or stranger see you do it. This is only careful courtesy.

Never get into a car with a loaded gun. Never load your gun while still in your car. Never permit anyone else to have a loaded shotgun in the car you are in.

Never shoot heavy loads in an old gun that was manufactured long before the modern high-pressure loads were invented. To do so may result in having your hand or face torn off. Consult your local gun dealer about what loads your gun will stand. He should be able to tell you.

Never shoot at game on "a level through brush that you can't see beyond—your partner or another hunter may be there. Think before you shoot. You have more time than you imagine. Never hesitate to call another gunner down for carelessness. Call him down hard. Every real sportsman will applaud you.

Be careful! You'll never be a good shot until you're a CAREFUL shot.

Napoleon Was a Failure as Writer, Record Shows

Eighteenth-century documents recently brought to light establish the little-known fact that Napoleon Bonaparte, before he became a military conqueror, had a burning ambition to become a great writer, writes J. P. Bowles in the Golden Book Magazine, who says that he spent seven years in vain efforts to write successfully and, finally, in chagrin, gave up with the remark: "I no longer have the petty ambition to become an author."

Between the ages of seventeen and twenty-four, the documents disclose, Napoleon made nine separate attempts to gain a career as a writer.

In one of the two short stories there appears the following significant sentence—the last sentence of the second story: "To what lengths," exclaimed Napoleon, "can the mad desire for fame carry a man?"

Treadmills Still in Use

Treadmills operated by horses, oxen and other animals are in use in many countries. In the United States such mills are used comparatively little, but in some sections of the South, treadmill power is used for simple power production. In Cuba treadmills are still used for grinding sugar cane. All through the Orient they are used for raising water, for gristmills and similar uses.

Red Indians' Conception of a Supreme Being

The Indian Supreme Being had a number of different names: "He who gives us food," "He who is master of the earth," etc. Over a considerable part of the region, though not everywhere, he was also called Manitou, the common Algonkian word meaning supernatural being. Professor Cooper, anthropologist of the Catholic university of America, found that some of the Indians remembered his name as Kitchi Manitou, or great spirit; but he is inclined to think that this title may have crept in since the coming of white men.

The Indians' Supreme Being was placed at the head of a highly developed organization of spirits by the eastern tribes, among whom Professor Cooper made his studies. He had under him four great "chief" spirits. Three ruled the birds, the four-footed animals and the fish, respectively. To the fourth was given the government of the caribou or wild reindeer, whose great importance to the Indians justified a separate rating.

Under each of the three "divisional chiefs" were many lesser overseer spirits, each having charge of a single species. Most important among the overseers of the birds were the rulers of the eagle and the fish hawk; chief among the overseers of mammals was the ruler of the bear. The Indians all agreed that these lesser spirits had not made their animals and did not own them; ownership was vested in the Supreme Being alone, and only he had the final decision over their disposal.

Why Liquid Laxatives are Back in Favor

The public is fast returning to the use of liquid laxatives. People have learned that the right dose of a properly prepared liquid laxative will bring a more natural movement without any discomfort at the time, or after.

The dose of a liquid laxative can be varied to suit the needs of the individual. The action can thus be regulated. A child is easily given the right dose. And mild liquid laxatives do not irritate the kidneys.

Doctors are generally agreed that senna is a natural laxative. It does not drain the system like the cathartics that leave you so thirsty. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a liquid laxative which relies on senna for its laxative action. It gently helps the average person's constipated bowels until nature restores their regularity.

You can always get Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at any drug store, ready for use.

"Nothing can hurt him again, Milly. You—"

"So, I've run Milly Gooch to earth at last! Mademoiselle Millee! And with you, Gerard! She would be!"

With a smothered imprecation, Rodney wheeled to face Len Calloway who leaned against the side of the door. With difficulty he kept his voice low.

"Don't you see what has happened? If you can't keep your dirty mouth shut, get out."

The sound Calloway made was more a snarl than a laugh, though an expression of sardonic mirth doubtless had been his intention.

"I'm going."

He turned to Prudence who, white and still, knelt beside the couch on which Jean was stirring restlessly.

"Any ten-year-old child would get wise to what's been going on between those two, Miss Schuyler."

Rodney Gerard shut his teeth hard into his lip. Prue could deduce anything from Calloway's voice and implication. What would she think?

Milly Gooch caught his hand and with a choking sob laid her cheek against it.

"What shall I do, Roddy? Grandpop's gone and I have only you now."

Half of her appeal to him was genuine grief, half was staged to irritate Len Calloway who was glaring at her from the threshold, Gerard decided.

With a suggestive laugh Calloway departed. The physician touched Gerard's shoulder.

"You'd better get that youngster home—quick."

"I will."

Rodney bent over the girl crouched beside the crumpled body of the clown. He freed the hand she still clutched. "I'll see you tonight, Milly. Pull yourself together." He laid his hand on the bowed head before he turned away.

"Come, Jean. I'll carry you, dear."

The town behind them, Gerard sent the roadster forward along the smooth road between its gay borders of fall shrubs. Once he looked at Prudence. She had her face against Jean's hair; the child's long lashes lay like fringes on her pale cheeks. He said gruffly.

"What a mix-up! A town burns up. A circus is thrown off schedule. A clown sent scouting. He took a chance on your garden—he'd try anything once—and then—a man who hates me lays his hand on my shoulder—and this for Jean—and tragedy for Chicot. Chicot's daughter, her husband, and child lived in the red brick house when Milly Gooch was a little girl. He visited them. That was what he meant yesterday when he said that he had lived in this region."

"I suspected you had seen him before."

"And because of what Len Calloway implied, you have me tried and sentenced, I'll bet."

She did not answer, only pressed her cheek closer against Jean's hair. He kept both hands tight on the wheel. Why had he let her invade his life? Why had he allowed her to make him madly happy or so infernally miserable by a look? Rapture and agony. He knew what the words meant now.

"I'll drop you at your gate," he proposed curtly.

"No. I will go on to High Ledges. I won't leave Jean until I see her with her mother."

Jean opened her eyes and lifted her head from Prudence's shoulder.

"I'm not going home until Mother has gone. There's nothing the matter with me except that I feel kind of dizzy; it helps steady things to keep my eyes closed. You won't mind if I stay with Miss Prue for a while, will you, Uncle Rod?"

"You should be with your mother, dear."

"I'm not going to be with my mother, so that's that."

"Getting back to normal fast, aren't you, K. K.?"

"Course I am, Uncle Rod. Let me stay with Miss Prue today, that's a peach. I'll wait on Mr. David. I love him."

She began to cry.

"Let her stop with me," Prudence pleaded.

"No. She's going back to High Ledges and I hope I land her there before her mother gets away. I had persuaded her to leave Jean with me; it is only fair that she should know what happened, what a flop I am as a guardian."

Except for an occasional query as to Jean's comfort, Gerard said nothing more during the long ride home.

They reached the red brick house. Gerard looked down at Jean.

"Pull yourself together, K. K. If you and I are to be on our own, we've got to go forward like soldiers, not whimper when we have to do things we don't like. Get me?"

Jean straightened, wiped her eyes, gave him a watery smile.

"Sure I get you, Uncle Rod. I feel fine now, really I do." She slipped a hand under his arm. "Perhaps, perhaps Mother has gone already," she whispered hopefully.

In his mind Gerard echoed the hope as they approached the house of stone and oak which his grandfather had built. He stopped the roadster at the front steps.

Judkins appeared as if by magic. Gerard sprang from the car, lifted Jean out.

"Where's Mrs. Walter, Judkins?"

"She went soon after you left, sir. She decided to motor to the city."

"Ask your sister to take a look at Miss Jean, will you? I want to phone."

"Yes, sir. Mr. Armstrong arrived soon after you left."

"Armstrong! So soon! Where is he?"

"He went for a walk. Mrs. Walter was just going, and things were in kind of a stir, so he—" He coughed discreetly behind his hand.

"So he stepped out. I get you. Go up and lie down, Jean, and if you are good and feel fine, you may dine with us. You'll like Jim Armstrong, K. K., he's a great old boy."

"I won't move from the couch all day, if only I may have dinner with you just as if I were grown up, Uncle Rod. Do you suppose Mr. Jim will like me? I wonder—I wonder if he will fall in love with Miss Prue—too."

Gerard felt his face warm with color.

"That last wisecrack has shown me that you are back to normal, K. K., quite back to normal. Now listen, one more like that and you'll spend the winter in the bosom of your family—in New York city."

After dinner Jean sat on a low stool beside the fire. Elbow on her knee, chin in one hand, her eyes were on Jim Armstrong, spectacled, sinewy, with an out-of-door bigness.

"It's corking to have you here, Jim. You haven't changed, unless you've grown heavier," Gerard commented.

"It's grand to be here, Rod. I won't say that you haven't changed in the last two years though. Where's that lazy drawl which drew the female of the species after you in squads?"

"I chuckled that when I decided to become a lumber king. I'm in business now, as I wrote you. At least I'm making a stab at it. At present I've struck a snag. There's a guy here named Len Calloway, also in the lumber business, who threatens to boycott any man who works for me."

"What has stirred this Calloway up?"

"I beat him to it in persuading Miss Schuyler to engage me to cut the timber in a tract she owns."

"Who is Miss Schuyler? She doesn't belong by any chance to that family—"

Gerard glanced at Jean whose ears were fairly standing out in eagerness to hear.

"She is a sister of David Schuyler. Know him? He was a New York lawyer."

"I've heard of him. Poor—"

"Miss Schuyler inherited a tract of woodland, along with a house and other land. She came here to farm—her brother's health had broken down. Immediately the aforementioned Calloway—"

"Hate him pretty much, don't you, Rod?"

"It isn't a chuckling matter, Jim. Si Puffer, who worked for the new owner's uncle and is a sort of handy man for her, told her not to let Len cut for her. I decided that I would cut for her and myself—that's when I sent for you. Calloway was furious as—well, we've had trouble over another matter."

"Is Miss Schuyler—young?" Armstrong quizzed, as he lighted his pipe.

"Yes, and so pretty," Jean chirped eagerly. "Mother Puffer says that her eyes are like brown pansies and that her voice would coax the birds off the bushes. When she laughs her eyes are all gold spangles."

"K. K., you've been so quiet I had forgotten you were here. It's time you went upstairs. Toodle along now like a good girl."

"All right, Uncle Rod." She kissed him, and with a little curtsy said good-night to Armstrong. The two men rose and waited until she had left the room. Then the forester dropped a question.

"Has this man Calloway by any chance a sentimental interest in your neighbor?"

"He'd better not have."

"Why the growl?"

Rodney Gerard rose impetuously and stood back to the fire. "Here are my cards face up on the table. I'm mad about Prudence Schuyler. I will marry her if I have to move the world to do it. Get that straight?"

"I'll say I get it straight. I can read a 'No Trespassing' sign when I see one, believe me. Does the lady with the spangled eyes realize that she is posted, Rod?"

"It's no joke to me, Jim. I guess the old song's right, 'Love has a meaning all its own'—to different people. Mine is the one-woman brand. The first time I met Prue—I can't explain it to you, you will think I've gone goofy—I felt as if—as if the universe had been made over and I was reborn—with an ambition to grab the world by the tail and a determination to make the girl love me."

"Raring to go off the deep end, aren't you? Um. Pretty serious jam you're in, Roddy."

"It darn well is."

Armstrong laid his hand on Gerard's shoulder. His eyes were warm with affection.

"Buck up! I don't know how any girl could resist you. You generally get what you want. To return to our nuttons. Contracts made to sell your lumber?"

"Not a contract. I have been so, what Si Puffer calls het up, with this fight with Calloway that I hadn't thought where I would dispose of it."

"You'd better get busy on that end, I'll give you a list of going concerns; then you'd better hustle after business. Do we start our investigation of the timber tracts tomorrow?"

"Yes," Gerard glanced at the clock. "You'll excuse me, Jim, if I break away? Something important I've got to take care of tonight. Si Puffer is engaging men to go along with us tomorrow to cut."

Puffer appeared in the doorway.

"Here he is now! Come in, Si. This is my old friend Jim Armstrong who has come to tell us what trees to take out."

"Pleased to make your acquaintance, Jim. Gorry-me, Rod, I'm plumb discouraged. Don't know's we're goin' to need a forester."

"Why not? What has happened?"

"Now don't fly off the handle like that just because I hint we're in for trouble. Whatta man is, I've been all over the village tryin' to hire men to cut for us tomorrow. They all had some fool excuse. I cornered one of 'em an' jest squeezed it out of him that Len Calloway had let it be known that none of them would get more work from him—ever—if they hired out to you. He's got 'em scared. He pointed out that you might start out big, Rod, but you wouldn't stick; that this was just a fad of yours, an' where would they be when you quit?"

"I quit!" Gerard's blue eyes were black. "Go back and tell those men that there isn't room in this town for Len Calloway and me and that I am staying."

CHAPTER VI

His challenge to Calloway had been good theater, but could he back it up, Gerard asked himself, as a few moments later his car shot into the highway between the two great iron gates set in stone posts at High Ledges. He wanted to reach the show grounds before Milly went on for her act. Perhaps he couldn't help her, but if he didn't, she might turn to someone not so disinterested as he.

His thoughts turned back to the first time he had seen Milly Gooch. Her father and mother had hired the old, out-of-repair red brick house for almost nothing and had lived there one summer while out of a circus job. He, at High Ledges from prep school for vacation, had spent every available hour with the family listening to their stories of the Big Top.

After the Gooch family left the red brick house for the circus, Milly had come each year to visit the Puffers to get "fed up" and some red blood into her. Mother Puffer had told him. He had seen her rarely, but, as she had grown into a stunning looking girl, her long, narrow eyes and her expert use of them had caught Len Calloway. Had it been just an exciting game with her? She had become engaged to him. Next he heard of her he had received a wire:

"ROD. MUST SEE YOU STOP SHOW IN YONKERS SATURDAY STOP DON'T FAIL ME"

"MILLY GOOCH"

He could recall even his amazement at the summons. Why had she sent for him? In that far away summer Walter had been more of a friend than he; he had been fascinated by her mother. Of course he would go.

He remembered the defiance in her big dark eyes, the whiteness of her face under its make-up, as she had whispered:

"I—I've walked out on Len, Rod."

He recalled that he had laughed at her—it was unbelievable that Calloway would release anything he once had held. She had retorted:

"Yeah, it isn't a joke. I—well, your brother Walter's been my boy friend. I just burn him up. I'm sick of riding, riding whether I'm feeling bum or not, and having Grandpop out of a job half the time. I'm going to be a lady and be taken care of and take care of him."

"Walter!" Gerard felt again the shock that had brought him up standing. "Walter! Walter has a wife."

He remembered her laugh. "Say, Big Boy, where have you come from? Been asleep since the Puritans landed?"

He had caught her hands tight in his. "Look here, Milly, you can't do that. Walter isn't worth it. Milly! Milly! Promise that you—you won't—until I see you again."

Quite plainly now he could see her shining eyes as they had met his.

"Listen, if you care what I do, I promise, Roddy."

He sent the car ahead in a burst of speed. A string of wagons was leaving the show grounds as he entered. That meant that the audience was in the big tent. Gerard stopped before the tent on the wall of which "MADEMOISELLE MILLEE" was stamped in black letters. As if she had been waiting for him, Milly Gooch stepped from behind the curtain drawn across the front of it.

Never had he seen her look lovelier. Her dark hair was curled close to her head; the mascara on her lashes increased the brilliance of her narrow, sloe-black eyes; the crimson of her lips accentuated the ivory pallor of her skin. Her great dark eyes glittered with tears.

"You sure are a dependable guy, Roddy." She perched on the top of a pedestal. "Take that chair. Say, wasn't that a terrible deal Grandpop got this morning. And wasn't it like Len Calloway to put on his act at just that minute! That bozo's grown old."

"When did you talk with him last, Milly?"

"The day I gave him back his ring. Look out for him, he has it in for you, Roddy. Doesn't he know that it was Walter, not you, who made me break with him?"

"I came to see if I could help about your grandfather. Won't you need money?"

"Not from you. The management takes care of that. Who was the kid Grandpop saved?"

"Walter's little girl, Jean."

"Well, of all the breaks—Grandpop passing out for the kid of the man he hated." She laughed, laughed until the sound cracked in an hysterical sob.

"Milly! Milly! Stop! You won't be able to ride if you don't. Here, look up." He pulled a handkerchief from his pocket. "Let me wipe your eyes. Now smile as if I were a Johnnie in the front row."

She looked up with an attempt which twisted his heart.

"That-a-girl! All set now?"

She choked back a sob. Caught the handkerchief.

"All set, Roddy. May I have this?"

"Sure, but what the Dickens will you do with it? Haven't any pockets concealed in that ritzy costume, have you?"

TO BE CONTINUED.

Death Valley an Inferno

in Summer, Winter Ideal

Although it lies below sea level for 78 miles of its total length of 118 miles, Death valley has gained the fame of being an inferno of heat in the summer, while the winter climate is considered ideal, observes a writer in the Los Angeles Times.

Death valley's greatest depth is 310 feet below sea level at Bad Water, 19 miles south of Furnace Creek Inn, yet only 16 miles in an air line across the valley from Bad Water majestic Telescope peak rears its crest to 11,045 feet above sea level, and 11,355 feet above the low point of the valley, the greatest rise in such short distance of any mountain in the United States. Even Mt. Whitney, premier peak of continental United States, which towers 14,996 feet above sea level, rises only 10,768 feet above the level of Owens valley at Lone Pine. The visitor at Bad Water, reached by a desert road south from Furnace Creek, actually views a higher mountain than Mt. Whitney when he gazes westward to the summit of Telescope peak.

Telescope peak, which is an outstanding landmark for many miles in every direction, either in or out of Death valley, was first scaled in 1890 by W. T. Henderson, who gave it the name it bears because of the magnificent view to be had from its summit.

For That Turtle Soup

Of the three common kinds of sea turtles, the hawksbill is exploited for tortoise shell, and the green turtle for its flesh, says the American Nature association. The remaining one of the trio, the loggerhead, seems not to offer any special temptation to man, but like the others has its nest robbed to an extent that threatens its abundance.

A North American Spectacle

Columbia glacier, in Alaska, is the largest and most spectacular glacier in the world. The slow-moving motion of the glacier creates a noise like the rumbling of distant thunder or heavy cannonading. The roar of the sliding and falling masses, reverberating throughout the surrounding mountains, may be heard 12 miles out to sea.

Thanksgiving the Family Day

THANKSGIVING is a day of glory and substance. Such a day it was in the beginning and it is hoped it ever shall be. Its glory is the spirit of thankfulness that pervades the hearts of us all. The substance is the bountiful supply of food that is ours.

Perhaps these are the reasons that Thanksgiving is particularly a family day, a day in which all of the family are thankful to be gathered under one roof once more. Thanksgiving day, observes a writer in the Kansas City Star, was born in that spirit as the Pilgrims went to church over snowy trails and returned to eat dinner of wild turkey from the forest and cranberries from the nearby marshes.

One may follow the traditional menu for that day or one may improvise, using the turkey for the main theme, building such variations of flavors about it that you may have your own gastronomic symphony so perfectly planned that your guests will remember your Thanksgiving dinner, for the particular harmonies of color and table need not follow too closely the spirit of the day. Your decorations may be thoroughly modern or traditional, as you please. The bowl of fruits as centerpiece is the latter. It may be flanked by such decorations as glass blown herons or silver pheasants.

For the Formal Dinner the Bird Is Carved in the Kitchen.

An Early American Thanksgiving Dinner

Roast Turkey Stuffed
A Pair of Chickens Stuffed and Boiled With Cabbage and a Piece of Lean Pork
A Chicken Pie
Potatoes, Turnips, Squash, Onions, Gravy and Gravy Sauce, Apple and Cranberry Sauce, Oyster Sauce, Brown and White Bread Plum and Plain Pudding
With Sweet Sauce Mince, Pumpkin and Apple Pies
Cheese

No longer does the table groan with food. The modern hostess places very few viands on the table. For the formal dinner the bird is carved in the kitchen and served from that quarter. For the informal or family dinner the bird may come to the table as the festive dish that graces the board. Turkey or any fowl may be prepared and stuffed well in advance of the dinner. Chicken, duck, goose or any fine roast may be served on Thanksgiving day. Your purse, your appetite and the personal tastes of the family should be considered.

The First Harvest

IT APPEARS that in the year 1621, the Pilgrim Fathers were so overjoyed when their first harvest was gathered in that they held a service of gratitude to God. The New England colonists set apart a day for that specific purpose, and since then similar services have been held annually, the last Thursday in November being the day appointed. In 1864, Sarah Josepha Hale, who is the reputed author of the nursery rhyme: "Mary had a little lamb," advocated the granting of a general holiday throughout the states on Thanksgiving day. This was adopted.

The Useful Onion

Everybody knows that boiled onions are splendid for breaking up a heavy cold, and also act as a stimulating nerve tonic, but not everybody profits by this knowledge.

Water in which onions have been boiled is a wonderful skin purifier, and whitens hands that are washed in it. In any case "onion water" should never be thrown away, as it makes splendid stock for soups.

The onion has household uses as well. If three or four bruised onions are boiled in a little water, the strained liquid is a cleaner of gilt picture frames. Apply with a soft brush, and polish with a clean duster.

Scorch marks caused by too hot an iron can be removed with a fairly wet paste made from boiled onion juice and fuller's earth. Leave on the scorch for an hour or two, and then wash off—first in cold and then in warm water.

If you tire easily

why not reason out the cause of this unnatural condition?

Your first thought may be, "I must eat more." That's not all. You should enjoy what you do eat. Frequently, the blood cells are low... and this, perhaps, is what makes you feel weak. If this is your trouble the stomach may not be calling for sufficient food. Zest to eat may be lacking. But what a difference S.S.S. makes when taken just before meals. Just try it and notice how your appetite and digestion improve. S.S.S. stimulates the flow of gastric juices and also supplies the precious mineral elements so necessary in blood-cell and hemo-globin up-building. Do try it. It may be the rainbow you need to brush away present discouragement over your health condition.

Do not be blinded by the efforts of a few unethical dealers who may suggest substitutes. You have a right to insist that S.S.S. be supplied you on request. Its long years of preference is a your guarantee of satisfaction.

The Voice of the American Legion

By The Tinley Park Post No. 615

TAKE THE PROFIT OUT OF WAR

If an argument was needed for the American Legion universal service legislation, it has been furnished by the Senate Committee which is investigating the so called "munitions racket."

The Legion asks that all profit be taken out of war. Stripped of all its details, that is just what the Legion is asking in its universal war service program. It knows that if that is assured, there will be no wars.

The testimony so far has been startling. It is detailed that one United States munitions firm alone made over a billion in profits. What other firms, both in this country and in Europe, profited runs into staggering figures. And evidence indicated that proportionate profit is being made out of the various small wars that have occurred since the World War, and in urging nations to prepare for war by buying war material, whether they need it or not. Huge commissions and even graft to insure these profits are also indicated.

The American Legion is going to make the passage of its legislation for the drafting of every industry, etc., on a non-profit basis, the same as man power, in case of another war, a major objective. It will, of course, be bitterly fought by those who vision lost profits.

If the American Legion can secure the passage of this legislation it will make a real contribution to the cause of peace and it will be a patriotic act, the fine effects of which will be reflected in the pages of history.

UNIVERSITY BLOCKS ACTIVITIES OF NATIONAL STUDENT LEAGUE

The fall and winter terms of schools, colleges and universities have only been under way a short time. However, the un-American, unpatriotic groups, the communists and radical pacifists are already at work spreading their insidious propaganda among student groups. As an example, we quote an Associated Press article of October 29:

"Los Angeles, Calif., Oct. 29—(AP)—Charged with participation in communistic activities at the University of California at Los Angeles, John Burnside, president of the Associated Students, and four other students were suspended today for one year.

"The others suspended were Sidney Zsagari, chairman of the forensics board; Thomas Lambert, chairman of the men's board; Mendel Lieberman, chairman of the scholarship committee and Miss Celeste Strack, former member of the university debating team.

"Dr. Ernest V. Moore, provost of the university, disclosed the existence of a campus organization known as the Nation Student League, which he characterized as a 'Communist organization,' and declared the suspended students were 'using their offices to destroy the university by handing it over to an organized group of communist students.

"To prevent this," he continued, he was suspending the five for persistent violations of the regulations of the university, including the holding of communistic meetings on its campus."

Dr. Moore is to be commented on the action he took in this case. The public is urgently requested to report activities of this nature in their communities immediately, to the local Legion Post or to the State Americanism Commission.

A colored recruit from South Georgia arrived in Bordeaux where he was placed in a pioneer infantry outfit, and his first assignment to duty was helping unload A. E. F. cargo at the docks. There was keen rivalry for tonnage records in those days, and the company to which he had been assigned was leading the pack but had pressed to hold the honors.

At the end of his first day's work, the recruit looked up the top sergeant and asked:

"Cap'n, is you all got mah name right on de books?"

"I guess so," replied the top, "but we can check up and see. What is your name?"

"Simpson, suh."

The sergeant started thru the service records; finally pausing at one, he asked:

"Henry Simpson, is that your name?"

"Yassuh, dat's hit."

"Satisfied now?"

"I guess so—but de way dat corp'l was a measurin' dem loads out to me, I thought maybe you all might a had mah name down as Samson."

A lodge brother had tarried too long over the wine before he decided to go home. Once on his way, he bumped into an iron tree-guard. Clutching the bars, he felt his way around it two or three times.

"Dammit!" he exclaimed. "In the hoosegow again!"

Dr. Bradley stated there are 75,000 books published in the world each year, and that he reads on an average of four books each week. When reading a book he does not read words, description or phrases, but senses the author's thought and the story thru concentration. He never reads plays, saying they were written to be played and poetry is best read aloud. He also never reads detective stories and can not understand the nature of anyone who likes that sort of reading. "Tell me what you read and I will tell you what you are," Dr. Bradley stated.

Luncheon was served at 12:30 and during intermission a very fine art display was viewed in the art gallery.

Bloom Protective Association

The farmers and producers of this vicinity have in the past suffered from chicken thieves, arson and burglary.

It seems high time to get together to combat this growing evil, catch the thieves and bring them to justice.

We have already organized and, with the guidance and assistance of the "Prairie Farmer," have perfected an organization to assist the law enforcing agencies to apprehend and punish those who are responsible directly or indirectly for the crimes committed against us and our territory.

An organization meeting will be held at TINLEY PARK CITY HALL, NOVEMBER 26, 1934 at 8 p. m. We will show moving pictures.

Everyone cordially invited to attend.

Best for Mother and Baby

THE headline sounds as if something medical were the subject of this story. But it isn't. It's food—pure food, scientifically prepared, which is not only better than any strained food you could prepare for your baby yourself, but saves baby's mother long hours of work and lost hours of sunshine.

For, if you are the mother of a baby and prepare its pureed food yourself, you must first go marketing, then you must wash the vegetables, then you must cook them, then you must puree them, and finally you must wash your pots and pans. You stain your fingers scraping carrots and shelling peas, roughen them washing spinach. Frequently there is scorching to contend with, for small quantities are hard to cook and your baby's food, to be most nutritious, should be prepared as needed. Frequently, too, many particles cling to the sieve and just won't be strained. And this goes on day-in and day-out, week after week and month after month.

Saving Work Not the Point

But saving work for mother is not the point of these specially prepared foods, although they go to make a healthier, happier mother who can thus take better care of her baby. The point is that the best home cooking method is far from being as efficient as the best commercial practice in preparing sieved vegetables.

We are not making the above statement on our own authority. Read part of what Doris W. McCray wrote in a recent number of Hygeia, the Health Magazine published by the American Medical Association.

"Fortunately for mothers today," she wrote, "the work of preparing vegetables, soups and cereals for babies and invalids is done in canneries. A mother should choose the brand of food which in every respect offers the highest nutritional values. The work of the Committee on Foods of the American Medical Association in considering and accepting brands of commercially canned sieved vegetables is an invaluable guide in making this choice."

Recommended by Physicians

"The physician often recommends sieved vegetables for infants, children, convalescents and for the sick who require special diets. The fiber of the vegetable is more easily handled by the digestive tract when it has been comminuted by some process such as sieving, straining, grinding or pulverizing."

"The best home cooking method is not as efficient as the best commercial practice in preparing sieved vegetables. This is true because many companies are able to carry on research to discover improved methods and to check on them from a nutritional standpoint. The best commercial canners maintain splendidly equipped laboratories, employ highly trained chemists, biochemists and nutritionists, and maintain fellowships in various universities.

Buy the Best Brands

"When cans of carrots, peas, spinach, tomatoes and green beans, in the same brand of sieved vegetables, were compared (by the Committee on Foods of the American Medical Association), the can of peas was found to contain the largest amount of phosphorus, the can of spinach the largest amount of calcium and manganese, and the tomatoes the largest amounts of iron and copper. Of course, if you were a dietitian, you would have to know the differences in the composition of the vegetables, how to plan diets and weigh amounts, but if you are a mother or perchance the wife of a 'dieter,' you will merely need to follow the doctor's orders and then use housewife's precautions to purchase the best brands. It is possible to choose a sieved vegetable that is all right, except that some of the nutritional value that is supposed to be present is not there. That is why you will look for the Seal of Acceptance of the Committee on Foods of the American Medical Association in the advertising matter; its presence gives assurance that the nutritional values and the advertising statements have been considered acceptable."

Recent Studies Stress Importance of Milk for Sound Teeth

The dentist is well trained to help you and your children build and maintain sound teeth.

PERSONS who visit the dentist twice a year or oftener realize that he is really a friendly fellow who wants nothing more than to help one have good teeth. Your dentist doesn't drill in or pull out healthy teeth, only those that you, by your lack of care, have indicated that you no longer want.

To have sound teeth means more than just having clean teeth, because brushing alone will not keep them sound, although brushing twice daily will keep the teeth clean and the mouth sweet. Proper diet is the most important factor in the building of sound teeth, and fresh milk the most important factor in the proper diet because of the large amount of calcium and phosphorus contained in fresh pasteurized milk. Fresh fruits and vegetables provide the other requirements. Recent studies made by scientists of leading universities have revealed rather startling facts about the effect of diet on teeth.

These studies indicate that sound teeth are not inherited, except as they depend upon the amount of calcium and phosphorus in the system of the mother prior to the birth of a child. If all during a child's life he receives as part of his daily diet a quart of fresh milk, fruits, and vegetables his teeth should develop normally, regardless of the condition of his parents' teeth.

Children and their parents do not always know that the permanent teeth begin to form at birth and come through the gums beginning about the sixth year and continuing until about the eighteenth year. Sometimes little children about six years of age begin to feel that they no longer need milk, that it is a food for babies only. If the calcium and phosphorus so necessary for the building of sound teeth is not taken into the body in sufficient quantities during the period from six to eighteen years, the result might be a set of false teeth at an early age and after much suffering, to say nothing of the damage that might be done to the general health. Even when the permanent teeth are all through, milk is needed as much as ever in order to keep the teeth healthy and free from the decay which is frequently responsible for serious poisons in the system. Fresh pasteurized milk is one of the few foods required by everyone every day throughout his entire life.

One of the easiest and most pleasant ways of impressing upon the child's mind the facts concerning the actual structure of a tooth and dental hygiene is to visit the dental exhibit in the Hall of Science at the World's Fair. There, in addition to the huge charts which show the amount of enamel, dentine, and pulp that forms a tooth, is the "Talking Tooth." This is the story of an imaginary visit to a dentist, in the course of which one learns all the fundamental principles of sound teeth building and care.

The President's Guess Headed for the Dole? Writing for Young People How We Prepare

A Washington story, more or less authentic, says: "The President, talking to reporters at Hyde Park, made guesses on the election results, and made 16 mistakes." That may be, but he made no mistake in his guess that the people of the United States would support him and his policies by an overwhelming vote, and that was the guess that really interested him.

Mr. Ickes tells Vincent Astor's news weekly that this nation must face government payment of cash relief as a long-lasting institution. Also we must face that ugly word "dole," so unpleasant to proud Americans unemployed, exquisitely painful to American taxpayers.

About the dole we shall be like the lady that, "vowing she would never consent, consented."

The plain, unvarnished dole is ahead of us.

In his chapter on statesmen in the "Philosophical Dictionary," Voltaire said he did not write for the statesmen of his time, because they were too busy to listen. He wrote for young men that would be statesmen and do something after his death.

That was a sound prediction. Those that were young when he wrote got rid of kings and laid the foundation of the powerful French republic after he was dead.

Writing for the young, offering suggestions, is a pleasing occupation. When the suggestions are carried out, after you die, you cannot be held responsible if they prove to be unsound.

Maj. Gen. Smedley D. Butler, who commanded the marines, says: "I'll never again carry a rifle beyond the borders of the United States." Of the 1,600,000 men sent to Europe he says: "I did not come across a single one who knew why he was there."

General Butler is right. Any fighting outside of our borders should be done from the clouds—bombs and poison gas dropped by airplanes—and from below the water with submarines.

Concerning the amusing fashion in which a country like the United States manages a great war when it rushes in unprepared, General Butler says:

"The war never brought this country anything. A few insiders made money. International Nickel company earned 1,800 per cent. The government bought

See the way the panel idea is prolonged in the seams of the skirt! Don't you like the sleeves?—they can be short or long. And please don't overlook the back view, with that nice pointed yoke.

"Mechanical Brain" That Solves Problems

THIS is the "mechanical brain" being completed at the Moore school of engineering of the University of Pennsylvania. The machine weighs six tons, and was designed by Oscar Schuck to facilitate the solving of all problems in higher mathematics in 1/2 minute. It is technically known as a "differential analyzer" and is able to complete in 15 minutes the work that would require five mathematical technicians four months to do.

Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

A LESSON IN POLITENESS

A FLOCK of modestly dressed yet rather distinguished looking feathered folks alighted in a cherry tree and began helping themselves to Farmer Brown's cherries. They were about the size of Winsome Bluebird, but did not look in the least like him, for they were dressed almost wholly in a beautiful rich, soft, grayish-brown. Across the end of each tail was a bright yellow band. On each, the forehead, chin, and a line through each eye was velvety black. Each wore a very stylish pointed cap, and on the wings of most of them were little spots of red which looked like sealing wax. From this they got the name of Waxwings. They were slim and trim and quite dandified, and in a quiet way were really beautiful.

"If they stay long, Farmer Brown won't have any cherries left," remarked Peter.

"Don't worry," replied Jenny Wren. "I don't know anybody equal to them for roaming about. Here are most of us with families, while those gadabouts haven't even begun thinking about housekeeping yet. They certainly do just look at that performance, will you!"

There were five of the Waxwings, and they were seated side by side on a branch of the cherry tree. One of them had a plump cherry which he passed to the next one. This one passed it on to the next, and so it went to the end of the row and half way back before it was finally eaten. Peter laughed right out. "Never in my life have I seen such politeness," said he.

"Huh!" exclaimed Jenny Wren. "I don't believe it was politeness at all. I guess if you got at the truth of the matter you would find each one was stuffed so full that he thought he didn't have room for that cherry, and so passed it along."

"Well, I think that was politeness just the same," retorted Peter. "The first one might have dropped the cherry instead of passing it along."

Just then the Waxwings flew away.

THROUGH A Woman's Eyes

By JEAN NEWTON

DOING NOTHING USEFUL!

"I HAD two hundred letters waiting, a few days ago, and I deliberately went out for the afternoon and spent two hours reading poetry. This was entirely outside my schedule, and you will probably raise your hands in horror at the thought of breaking up a well-budgeted day, but I believe in the end it makes for better quality of work."

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt wrote that not long ago in a message on the necessity of every person occasionally to learn to loaf.

"Sometimes it is extremely good for you to forget that there is anything in the world that needs to be done, and to do some particular thing that you want to do," she remarked.

"Every human being needs a certain amount of time in which he can be peaceful. Peace may take the form of exercise, or reading, or any congenial occupation, but one thing which must not be connected with it is a sense of obligation to do some particular thing at some particular time."

That is a message which should be repeated and sent to every woman, particularly every wife and mother in the country. The man or woman with a job and office hours may work very hard, they may be under great stress and strain, but usually, when they shut the door of the office behind them they know that time of peace which is indeed necessary to every human being—that time when there is nothing in particular that they have to do. When a man comes home, his time of relaxation begins. And so with the working girl who comes home to her mother, or the bachelor woman who returns to her flat. Usually, the time there has "no strings tied to it."

But the wife and mother! How aptly some one said hers is the clock that has no hands. Take a rainy Sunday. There may be no cards or games, the papers may be read. Then the family will be just "sitting around." But mother? Oh, no; that's a chance to catch up on the darning or to start that sweater she wants to knit for little Jane. She doesn't have to fold her hands to rest!

But, doesn't she! If it were not for that darning or knitting on her mind, would she not enjoy occasionally just folding her hands and "sitting around"? I say she may not even know it, but she would. I say that every woman who keeps house should keep some time free for what Mrs. Roosevelt calls a time for being peaceful—a time when she will do nothing that could possibly be called useful!

QUESTION BOX

By ED WYNN... The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I read in the paper that a man fell from the roof of a ten-story building, into a wagon filled with soda water bottles. The newspaper claimed the man was not hurt. If this is true how do you account for it?

Truly yours,

I. DOUTIT.

Answer: That could happen, especially so if the soda water bottles were filled. In this particular case the man wasn't hurt because he fell into a wagon full of soft drinks.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I am sure I met the meanest man in the world. This man, as soon as the cold weather comes around, goes down to the railroad tracks and calls out all sorts of vile names at the engineers as they pass in their engines. It seems the engineers get angry, but they can't stop their engines, so they throw pieces of coal at him, trying, of course, to hit him. That's just what this man wants. He has a bag with him and as the engineers throw the coal at him he picks it up and takes it home for his furnace. Did you ever hear of anyone meaner than that?

Truly yours,

I. GOSSIP.

Answer: That's pretty stingy; but I knew a man once who was so stingy it is unbelievable. He wanted to commit suicide and he went next door to use his neighbor's gas.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I have been married little over a year. My mother is coming to live with us. My husband says the only way he will let his mother-in-law live with us is for us to buy a folding bed

Huckleberry Pie

By ANNE CAMPBELL

IT'S just a huckleberry pie
Set on the window ledge to cool.
Outside the summer sun is high,
The sky a blue inverted pool.
And once again a barefoot child
Sets out to find, tin pail in hand,
The berries hiding in the wild
Far off upon that pleasant land.

It was in huckleberry time
The farm was loveliest to see . . .
I saw the morning-glories climb
Upon my window happily;
And glancing backward, as I walked
With cheerful footsteps down the lane,
It seemed to me the brown wrens
mocked
That little girl so tanned and plain.

But nothing changed that sense of peace
That was my heart's blest quality.
The woodland path was a release
From irksome household tasks to me.
But now upon small things intent,
I view with an approving eye
The sweetness of home's sacrament,
Caught in a huckleberry pie.

C. R. KLEIN of Santa Monica, Calif., is here shown with his recently completed harpoon gun which will be used for shooting swordfish, alligators, sharks, etc. The gun can also be used in emergencies by life guard stations for firing life lines to distressed persons and boats. The gun, constructed of steel and bronze, is 30 inches in length and weighs but 20 pounds. It has two hand pumps, one for low and the other for high pressure. The line can be shot 150 yards with 300 pounds pressure. The sight on the gun is similar to an airplane ring sight. The gun also has a rail attachment that can be used instead of a tripod. The tapered cone is used with the line wound on it, this cone keeping the line from tangling when the harpoon is fired. It is equipped with a pistol grip and trigger for firing.

Old City Under Spotlight

Pecs, Hungary, With Long Historical Record, Comes Into Prominence With Probably Unprecedented Hunger Strike Ever Carried Out.

When hundreds of coal miners of Pecs, Hungary, recently sought to force their demands for increased wages upon their employers by remaining without food in coal pits, they brought fame to their town in one of the most unusual ways on record.

"Pecs, with approximately 64,000 inhabitants, is the eighth largest city in Hungary," says a bulletin from the Washington headquarters of the National Geographic society. "It lies about 110 miles almost due south of Budapest, near the southern border of the country, and about 15 miles west of the Danube river."

"Pecs has not often attracted international attention, but it has existed for many centuries—probably since Roman times. It was the see of a bishop as early as 1000. The Turks occupied it from 1543 to 1686. Although there are few relics of its early years to be seen today, one minaret still stands from which, during Turkish occupation, Moslem priests called the faithful to prayer. The Turks altered many Christian churches and used them as mosques; but when the invaders returned east, the temporary mosques again became Christian places of worship."

"The Pecs cathedral, a four-towered building, was originally built in the Eleventh century, but was rebuilt during the latter part of the Nineteenth century. It is one of the city's outstanding landmarks and one of the oldest churches in Hungary. Pecs also has a university which was established about 600 years ago; but many times throughout the city's turbulent history it has had to close its doors."

"The Mecsek hills northwest of the city are famous for their vineyards. Well-kept farms frame the city, but Pecs is more famous as an industrial center than as a market. It stands out among Hungarian cities as one of the few where most of the workers are employed in industry. More than three-fifths are so employed. About one-third work in the coal mines, east of the city, others in pottery, metallurgical, and clothing industries."

"The coal mined in this area is the best in Hungary, and accounted for a large portion of the kingdom's production of more than 6,000,000 tons in 1932. Hungary also has important diggings at Ajk, and elsewhere, a number of brown-coal and lignite mines."

"Perhaps one reason why Pecs is not better known is that it is many centuries older than its present name. Before it was called Pecs in the Eighteenth century, it was known as Funfkirchen (German for 'Five Churches'). The German name was justified because thousands of Germans moved to the city when it was a sleepy town of 2,000, left by the Turks. After the Germans arrived, Jews arrived and organized the commerce of the growing city."

"Awakened Pecs was a magnet to thousands of Hungarian peasants and other Europeans. In 1840 there were more than 14,000 inhabitants; in 1900, 44,000.

"Today the city's population is a hodgepodge of many races. A recent census showed that about 63 per cent of Pecs' residents hailed from other parts of Hungary and many other countries of Europe."

PROPER FOODS AID TO BEAUTIFUL TEETH

AN ATTRACTIVE smile is one of the most desirable marks of beauty that we know, but because of unlovely teeth, not everyone has an attractive smile.

Recent studies by eminent scientists have shown that beautiful teeth are not dependent upon the amount of brushing alone, but rather upon the amount of calcium and phosphorus taken into the body either directly or as food.

The enamel which forms the outer coating of a tooth is the hardest substance in the body, and although decay starts from the outside of the tooth, little progress in dental caries will be made if the proper teeth building elements are present within the teeth.

Calcium and phosphorus are found in large amounts in pure, fresh pasteurized milk, a quart of which a day will supply all of those minerals needed by the average person. As a matter of comparison a quart of milk contains as much calcium as would be found in 50 large apples, 20 eggs, 26 pounds of lean beef, 7½ pounds of oatmeal, and 11 pounds of tomatoes.

Drinking a quart of milk each day, brushing the teeth twice daily, and visiting the dentist for an inspection twice annually is the most direct, and yet the most simple way of having beautiful teeth—making your smile a decided beauty asset.

Recipe for Success

Find out where the money is and get there as quickly as you can and when you get there get all you can get there and then get out of there with all you could get out of those that are there before those that are there get out of you all that you got there after you got there.—Kansas City Star.

American Swedish Colony
Swedes established a colony in Delaware as early as 1888. They erected a fort on Christian creek and named the country New Sweden. They subsequently established a military post on the island of Tinicum, below Philadelphia.

Not All Blank Verse

In the main, "Hamlet" is written entirely in blank verse. The exceptions are the scenes in which Hamlet feigns insanity, those in which he converses with Rosencrans and Guildenstern, with the actors and with Osele and the scene with the grave diggers. All these are in prose.

Canadian Industries

Pulp and paper represent the largest of the manufacturing industries in Canada. Flour and grist milling comes second, and the production of lumber and forest products stands third.

Referendum Before War

The Smithsonian Institution says that the holding of a referendum on war was the accepted method among organized Indian tribes like the Irequoian and Muskogean tribes. This was mentioned by Lafitau in his writings published in 1724.

SAFETY COUNCIL AWARDS
GO TO TELEPHONE WORKERS

Of the fifty-eight awards of National Safety Council certificates made at the close of the fourth annual Greater New York Safety Conference in March, the largest number, twenty-three, went to employees of the New York Telephone Company. These awards were given for saving the lives of persons overcome by gas, smoke, poison and submersion.

The companies whose employees were honored, in addition to the New York Telephone Company, included the Western Electric Company, the New York Edison Company, New York and Queens Electric Light and Power Company, Brooklyn Edison Company, United Electric Light and Power Company, and the Bronx Gas and Electric Company.

She Has Never Been Absent in 35 Years

MISS NORA LONG

Miss Nora Long, an employee of the Southwestern Bell Telephone Company at Beaumont, Tex., is the holder of an unusual record. On July 1, 1898, she started to work for the company as a telephone operator in Beaumont. Last summer she celebrated her thirty-fifth anniversary of that event. The remarkable feature of her service, however, is that during that time, except for her regular vacations, she has never been absent from duty. Several other employees have service records equal to Miss Long's, but none has served without time out for illness or for other reason. When she first became an operator, Beaumont boasted of 300 telephones. The number has now increased to 10,000. She served as an operator until 1907, when she was transferred to the clerical department, and since 1922 she has been occupying her present position as a teller.
